Mesa Contemporary Arts Museum and the Gallery at Tempe Center for the Arts teams with EnChroma to Enhance Experience for Color Blind Visitors

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Nov 1, 2021 (Mesa, AZ)— Mesa Contemporary Arts Museum and the Gallery at Tempe Center for the Arts are excited to announce a collaboration with EnChroma, creators of patented eyewear technology for colorblindness to assist guests affected by red-green color vision deficiency.

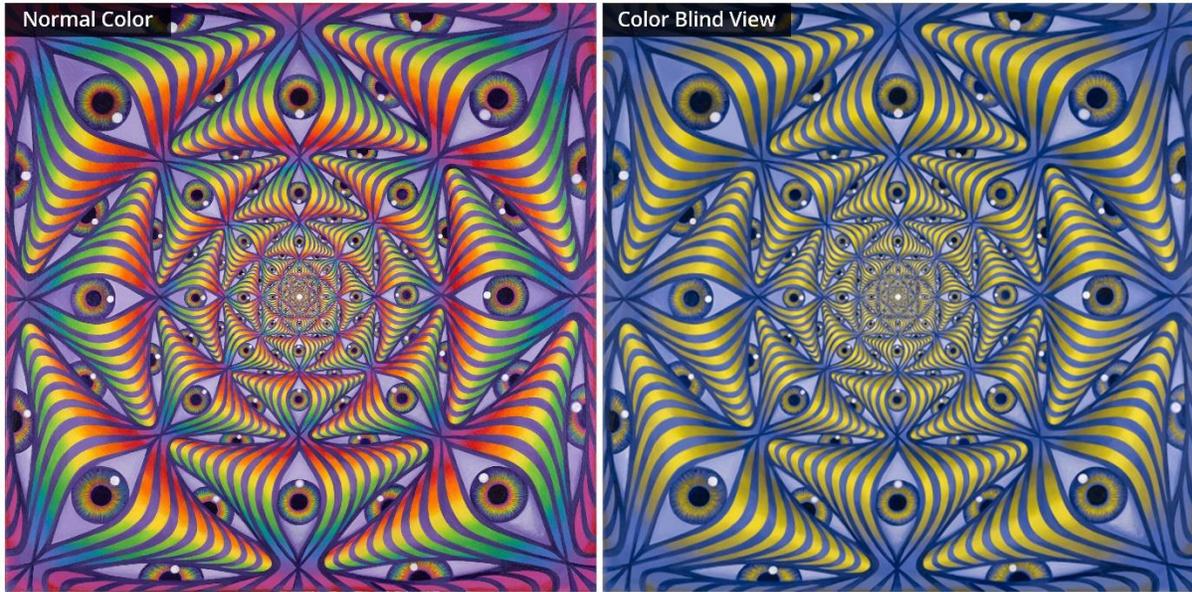

“Mesa Contemporary Arts Museum is thrilled to make the EnChroma glasses available to all our guests! This season, which highlights the Visionary Art Movement, seemed like the perfect time to launch this program. It provides another level of sight and understanding for those unable to behold the vibrancy captured by these artists. It also serves as a good reminder that experiences are not universal and a variety of factors, including how we see color, will have an impact on how we interpret art and interact with our physical world,” said Tiffany Fairall, Chief Curator for Mesa Contemporary Art Museum.

Beginning Nov 5, 2021, visiting guests to both venues will be able to borrow EnChroma Glasses to enhance their museum and gallery experiences through seeing an expanded range of colors more clearly and distinctly. EnChroma’s color blind glasses are engineered utilizing a light filtering technique to give those with color blindness the ability to see more of the broad spectrum of colors.

“One of the most important goals of the TCA’s arts programs includes making experiences accessible to all. Including EnChroma kits in our spaces helps us take one more step towards creating more dynamic arts opportunities that are relevant to our community members’ daily lives,” said Michelle Dock, Visual Arts Curator for Tempe Center for the Arts.

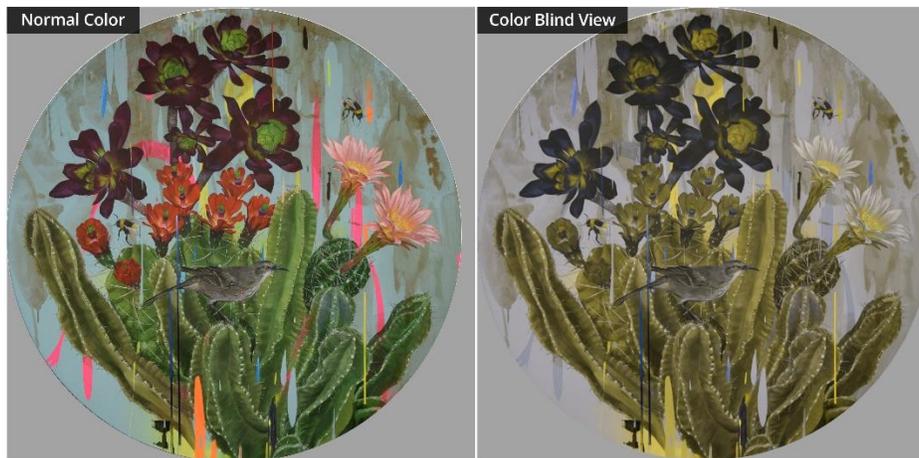

One in 12 men (8%) and one in 200 women (.5%) are color vision deficient; an estimated 13 million in the United States and 350 million worldwide. While people with normal color vision see over one million shades of color, those with red-green color vision deficiency only see an estimated 10% of hues and shades. As a result, many colors appear dull, muted, washed out, indistinct and difficult to discern.

“The mission of EnChroma is to enable those with color vision deficiencies to access more of life’s colorful experiences through our specially engineered eyewear,” said Erik Ritchie, CEO of EnChroma. “We are excited to collaborate with Mesa Contemporary Arts Museum to make its colorful works accessible to those with color blindness”.

EnChroma continues to lead in advocating for “color accessibility” through its EnChroma Color Accessibility Program. The program helps public venues, schools, state parks, libraries, museums and other organizations purchase and loan EnChroma glasses to color blind students and guests to help make schoolwork that involves color, colorful exhibits, attractions and/or experiences accessible to the color blind.
